Call for Papers
International Conference on International Colleges:
Liberal Arts, Business and Sustainability Science
June 24, 2022
Tunghai University International College

In Asia and throughout the world, the emergence of a multicultural and internationally mobile workforce has changed the face of undergraduate education. Universities are witnessing unprecedented demand from students seeking to earn their degrees in a foreign language. Many schools have instituted international colleges that allow students to achieve this goal, while learning side by side with classmates of different nationalities. International colleges are natural distribution hubs for study-abroad programs that enable learners to complete parts of their coursework in other countries. Input from academics, students, and professionals is needed to chart the future of international colleges. The Tunghai University International College cordially invites you to participate its first conference on international colleges.

Conference Themes and Topics for Oral Presentations

There will be three conference themes. Topics will include, but not be limited to, the following:

1. Professional Content Courses
International and domestic students enter university with varying levels of subject area content knowledge and language ability, but content courses must serve the needs of all students regardless of their entry levels.
 - Catering to classrooms with diverse academic backgrounds and language skills
 - Individualized career preparation
2. Liberal Arts Education
By studying the humanities, students can develop the ability to think critically, learn from opposing views, and reach a deeper understanding of complex problems. Liberal arts courses can also help students bridge the gap with classmates from other countries.
 - The liberal arts curriculum in the context of international colleges
 - Student cultural differences
 - Communication and language programs
3. The Sustainability of International Education
Recently the cross-border movement of students has been hindered by COVID-19 and deteriorating diplomatic relationships. To operate sustainably, international programs must find best practices for minimizing the impact of these and other disruptions.
 - The impact of COVID-19
 - Online instruction in an international context
 - Sustainability in education

In addition to theme-related submissions, we welcome presentations on specific courses (e.g., liberal arts, language, international business, or sustainability) or any other topic relevant to international colleges.

The Student Poster Sessions

The parallel poster sessions will provide an informal setting for students to present and discuss their research and ideas with attendees. Each applicant should work with a faculty member who will act as a sponsor and guide for the poster submission. Submissions should be connected to one of the three poster session categories: Sustainability, Management, and International Education.

Accepted posters will be printed and displayed in one of three poster sessions. Participants should be present during this time to interact with attendees. The posters will be evaluated by judges and attendees. At the afternoon closing ceremony, awards will be presented to students with outstanding posters. To encourage participation, ICIC2022 will print all accepted student posters and cover the associated fees.

Oral Presentations Submission Guidelines

1. An oral presentation submission will consist of an English abstract (under 300 words) or full paper.
2. All submissions will undergo double blind peer review by the ICIC 2022 Review Committee.
3. Authors will receive the review results by email.
4. After acceptance, oral presenters should register and submit a short biography.

Poster Submission Guidelines

1. The student and faculty sponsor should submit an English abstract of 300 words or less.
2. Applicants and their faculty sponsors will be notified of the review results by email.
3. After acceptance, applicants should submit a file containing a draft of the poster.
4. The last step is to send the completed poster file.
